

RGP3550/6550H
Psychology & Religion

The course aims at

- a basic understanding of the relationship between psychology and religion;
- an exploration of the psychological methodology used for research and application in the study of this relationship;
- the application of this methodology to spirituality, religious development, behaviour, individual differences and abnormality by using theories and research on personality
- an application of these findings within the context of social and pastoral psychology.